

Artwork Commission Terms

These terms apply to the artwork we are discussing in this commission. My goal is Honest and Straightforward: I want the freedom to use and enjoy the finished artwork however I need to, without worry, while making sure the artist can still proudly show their work, receive credit for it, and reuse their artistic ideas in future commissions.

The character. I retain all rights, ownership, and licensing authority in the character/persona known as Rex / Kaito / Wolf, including his reasonably distinct and recognizable design, identity, markings, references, and other character-specific material I provide. I grant the Artist a limited, non-transferable right to use and depict the character solely as needed to create and share the specific commissioned artwork agreed upon between us.

The artwork. The Artist retains ownership of their normal working materials, sketches, brushes, templates, techniques, and other behind-the-scenes production materials unless we specifically agree otherwise. Once the finished commission has been paid for in full, copyright of the finished commissioned artwork transfers to me, allowing me to use, reproduce, post, print, distribute, sell, license, or otherwise use the finished unaltered artwork for personal or commercial purposes without additional royalties or permission.

Accrediting. At any point the art is publicly posted or used in any way it will be reasonably credited to the artist, normally as “Art by [Artist Name/Handle]” or something similar, and where reasonable a link or tag to artists preferred page will be applied.

The artist is always welcome to share their work. The artist may post the finished artwork whenever they like, including before I post it, and may use it in portfolios, commission examples, social media, convention displays, streams, or other promotion of their work. When the artwork or a recognizable WIP of my character is posted, I simply ask that the post identify me as the client and/or Rex/Wolf as my character, normally as “Commission by/for Rex Wolf” or something similar, optionally with a tag or link when Convenient. The finished depiction of Rex itself should not be resold, licensed to someone else, used to promote someone else's product, submitted for AI/model training, or otherwise commercially reused as though it were a separate piece belonging to another client.

Concept and YCH reuse are okay. The artist remains free to reuse the general idea behind the commission—including its pose, composition, framing, perspective, scene, theme, lighting idea, or generic underlying character placement—as a YCH or as inspiration for other paid artwork. The artist may freely sell those new works. The only limitation is that the reused version should be redrawn or adapted enough that it does not contain Rex-specific artwork or leave the new character recognizable as Rex. I don't claim any ownership or royalties in those new works.

I may freely make normal production changes such as resizing, cropping, formatting, adding transparency, borders, captions, sticker cut lines, or placing the artwork into layouts or products. If either of us wants to make a substantial artistic change to the actual artwork after the Commission is complete—such as redrawing it, changing the character, pose, expression, major colors or context,—Both parties must agree. The artist also confirms that the commissioned artwork is their work and that any significant third-party assets or generative-AI use will be disclosed beforehand.

If a commission is canceled before completion, unfinished work remains with the artist unless we agree otherwise. Rights to a completed piece transfer only once the artist has received the agreed full payment.

These terms are intended to keep things fair and simple for both of us. These terms are accepted and apply whenever an Artist creates artwork depicting my character. If the Artist and I agree beforehand to any different or additional terms for a particular commission, those terms will take precedence where they conflict, and the remainder of these terms will continue to apply as appropriate.